

POL 72 International Politics

Is the United States the sole global superpower or is it a declining power? Is the rise of China a challenge to US global status and power? Is the international system moving toward conflict or cooperation and peace? What is global warming and how it impacts international politics?

Interested in answering these questions? Then join POL 72 and let us think about them together.

Course description:

This course is an introduction to the field of international politics. It explores the foundations of modern international politics, the relationship between domestic and international politics, the various means for the pursuit of foreign policy goals by states, role of non-governmental organizations on the international scene and some approaches to problems of war and peace.

This course is open to students in any major.

POL 72 fulfills POL requirement for POL option

Pathways Flex A – World Cultures and Global Issues applicability of the course

Questions about POL 72, any other Political Science course offerings, or the Political Science Option? Please contact Prof. Hisseine Faradj (hisseine.faradj@bcc.cuny.edu) or Prof. Peter Kolozi (peter.kolozi@bcc.cuny.edu)